history is ever consistent with itself. It was through his Son made man that the invisible Father revealed himself and his divine Will to Jesus' followers, through the events of Jesus' earthly life and the sending of the Holy Spirit. Accordingly, in my own life, by contemplating Jesus in the episodes of his public life and death — listening for his words, observing his actions with faith — I shall assuredly dispose myself to see my place in contemporary salvation history. It is this very contemplation of the doings and sayings of the incarnate Word which put me in contact with God, who is my Father.

"God no man has ever seen; his only Son, who shares the secrets of his Father's heart, has personally acted as interpreter." The exalted Christ continues his work of interpretation for me through the activity of his Spirit. Thus at every instant of my reading of the Gospel, in my contemplation of Jesus' earthly activity, I am made aware that I behold the Father. This is guaranteed by the New Covenant, founded upon the Incarnation and completed by the moment of Jesus' death when he breathed forth, "handed over the Spirit" to me and all his covenanted People. There can no longer be any hesitation then for the Christian about man's ability to see the Father — thanks to the continuing reality of this New Covenant, which centers in the greatest events of salvation history. For the Word, the perfect Image of the invisible God, has become — and remains for all eternity — "flesh and blood."
